FRANCES KNORR THE 'BRUNSWICK BABY FARMER'

In late 1863 Frances Knorr was convicted of the murder of an infant in her care. She was sentenced to hang. The sentence followed a public outcry after the bodies of several infants were found buried in the back yards of houses she had rented. Two had obviously been murdered. There was widespread outrage that many so-called 'baby farmers' continued to ply their trade, despite attempts at regulation. But official refusal to establish a founding hospital meant that poor women had few alternatives.

MARTHA NEEDLE (1864-1894)

Martha Needle was one of Australia's worst female killers. In 1894 she was hanged for the murder of her fiancé's brother, Louis Juncken. But before she was executed she probably poisoned both her former husband and all three of her children.

EARLY LIFE

Martha Needle's early life in South Australia was troubled. Her father John, who was young and unmarried, was a gambler and a drinker. Police reports described her as 'wild, uneducated, and unprincipled'. She was an alcoholic who beat her, and at the age of twelve, Martha was sexually assaulted by her stepfather.

MARRIAGE AND TRAGEDY

Martha Needle grew into a beautiful woman. She married Henry Needle and they soon left for Melbourne. In the next decade - 1864, 1865 and 1866, the three children of her marriage were murdered. Her family became infamous and notorious. Their family members sought to clear her name in 1890 and May in 1892. Her suspicion attached to Martha who was hanged in 1894.

A NEW START

After May's death, Martha moved to St. Albans. She and Otto soon became engaged to be married. She was a young woman in the early 1860s. Her husband was a gambler and a drinker. She was an alcoholic who beat her, and at the age of twelve, Martha was sexually assaulted by her stepfather.
